

Introducing A Children's Book With A Difference!

“Their lives are turned upside down when a luxury golf course invades their headland. The worms try to negotiate but their efforts are met with insecticide. Our long, wriggly friends have had enough! They decide to take action...

A story for children and (sssssh) adults too.”

Privatised ...

In 1979, a millionaire property developer purchased the Old Head of Kinsale in Cork, Ireland. His dream was to build a luxury golf course on the headland and in 1997 that dream came true. Soon after, access to the traditional walks and wild coastline at the Old Head was restricted to ‘club members’ only. A campaign – Free The Old Head – fought back but the developer had the courts and the gardaí on his side. In effect, the headland was annexed for the exclusive use of a small group of wealthy golfers. Today it costs €30,000 per year for membership at the Old Head Golf Links! Think that wrong? So do we!

Rebellion!

The Worms That Saved The World was inspired by the campaign to keep access to the Old Head free and open to all. The story is about a community of rebellious earthworms who fight to save their home when a luxury golf course takes over their headland. It's going to be a tough fight but our worms are resourceful. They haven't been hanging around on the planet for as long as they have without knowing a thing or two!

Solidarity, Direct Action

Including thirty-five beautiful illustrations by artist Spark Deeley, The Worms That Saved The World celebrates solidarity, direct action and standing up for your rights. It's a joyous book featuring ‘mutual aid’, collective struggle and guess what ...? The worms win! Here's a story for all the young people in your life and it can even be enjoyed by adults too!

Now distributed in the UK & Europe by AK Press!
Retailing at €10/£10